LANDSCAPE AND ENERGY.

Designing Transition | Dirk Sijmons ...

Landscape is not a static backdrop of a new energy infrastructure but an actor of energy transition in its own right. Sijmons considers spatial thinking offered by planners, landscape architects and architects as crucial and recommends research by design to make a strong political impact, as shown in the

Landscapes of Intensification. A look at previous energy transitions suggests that a new energy technology doesn't just enter mainstream use on its own—for a new energy regime to take root, it typically needs to be supported by a “landscape of intensification” that provide the ground for a new market and technology.
